

PADDY POWER PUSH BROWN BETTING AFTER GAFF

(29 April) Paddy Power has pushed out Gordon Brown's election odds following his disastrous microphone gaff today.

Having been caught calling a voter "bigoted" the bookies believe it's done him no favours ahead of the Election and have pushed Labour from 4/1 to 5/1 to win most seats.

It's also damaged Brown's chances of remaining PM with Paddy Power pushing the odds from 10/3 from 5/1. With Nick Clegg already suggesting he wouldn't work in a coalition with Brown as PM the potential Lib Dem kingmaker is only likely to take a further dim view of Brown's position.

Paddy Power have also pushed out Brown's odds on winning Thursday's TV debate to 5/1 from 11/4 whilst the mysterious 'Sue' – Brown's aide Sue Nye - blamed in the car for putting Brown in front of the woman in the first place is 3/1 to lose her job.

Darren Haines, spokesman for Paddy Power, said: "This is certainly a case of foot in mouth but is it also likely to prove to be one foot in the grave? At the very least it's not done Gordon any favours and the odds have drifted accordingly."
